My experiences with the feature list of Photoshop CC are quite good. I am not going to list all the wonderful new tools that are now available in terms of editing, but that would take up far more space than this review. Many of the changes that were implemented in Photoshop CC are a way of cleaning up and providing a more logical workflow for Adobe's flagship product. You may still need to stick with Lightroom for cataloging, but for all the other key functions of editing, Photoshop CC is [relatively] a one-stop shop. Lightroom has a longer history, and from time to time, its more powerful editing tools would sometimes better suite my needs as an image editor than Photoshop. With that in mind, I am still a huge fan of Lightroom and my preference for a more user friendly experience has held strong. In conclusion, Apple's platform and the range of third party tools and addons for the iMac give me the best of everything. Otherwise, I'm left with a MacBook Pro that is really not very good. The new standalone Photoshop makes for a nice addition to my Mac, though I am still far more comfortable with my MacBook Pro and Apple's intended workflow. Hi Bob,

Like most of the LR v5 reviews I've read on the web so far, I really like what I see. I'm working with PS CC 2015 at the moment, and I mostly use PS for image retouching and compositing. I'm very happy with my workflow, and am quick to whip up a retouched composite when inspiration strikes. I think I'll have to change my workflow with LR 5.2 though, as I won't be able to load the most recent projects into the old 2.7 version and work on them the same way. Having said that I like some of the enhancements already.

I haven't really used PS in a while, but when you talk about the new brushes, I think it's a very welcome addition. I remember a version of CS used to come out with a lot of new brushes, and I was there when Adobe tackled the introduction of Smart Filters. As one of the others said, there are truly some amazing things here. I really appreciate that you stuck with that direction, and not just added a ton of new "stupid" brushes.

I'm also excited about the ability to load PSDs into external applications which will make it faster for me to replicate stuff.

I'm glad you put the arrow buttons back into the navigation bar. I really hate having to use a mouse to click control buttons and toolbars - the only time I switch is when I'm using the mouse.

I really like your new layout, especially the size of the toolbar in the 12:16 version. I agree with others that the new color picker is really nice.

I'm always on the lookout for new plugins. I just installed Pixel Bender, and I'm going to try to test it out.

I love the accumulation of various tools and features in one app. You definitely put a lot of thought into this, and I really like it.

I really hope that you don't feel like it's just a money grab to add this functionality to your product, but more like an expansion of your existing product. Having said that, the revisions and additional features, especially custom brushes, look like an awesome value. I honestly thought that the custom PS brushes would be total garbage, but I'm really impressed with what I've seen so far.

I'm looking forward to Creative Cloud moving into a subscription model, and I think that it's going to make it a lot easier for you to focus on adding these additional features. I'm anxious to see what else you'll come up with for this app. I expect it's only a matter of time.

Thanks for the review. I do hope this is the first of many from you over the holidays. I know it's short notice, but I'm pretty excited to get started on my next holiday project.

Best,

Anthony
