One of the best aspects of the Creative Cloud for me is the investment in the AI. The AI features are light, but they are there. And, they are not what one might expect from AI. It is something much deeper and more significant. I do not feel compelled to share the specific, kind AI features, so that only those who use AI will get a glimpse. Suffice to say, AI helps users get answers without having to start from scratch. For example, I am currently sculpting an original Alphas Modulus Club painting that belongs to the list of the world's top 20. The AI is in here. The AI helps you stop and think more about your image, about your options, about what you might have missed, and about what is possible. I use the AI way more than I would use the regular tools. It jumps in and guides you with unspoken and unsearchable intelligence. I could get all the same information and more from any number of tools, but the AI has a broader and deeper reach. And the AI is just one example. The Cloud continues to be a one-stop shop for everything from the funky to the feature packed. Although I cannot foresee any new Adobe Creative Cloud software projects, I appreciate the thoughtful approach to the software. Back in the day, Adobe Photoshop was the standard for creating graphic images. Even when Apple introduced their own image tools (QuarkXpress I think it was called?), the tools were less capable for the graphic designer. Even with Apple having its own tools, you might still have had to use Photoshop to create the final output in some cases. But as the years have passed and computer technology advanced, the need to use Photoshop as the standard design tool, has been slowly forgotten. In recent years designers have been turning to other tools mainly because of the Adobe suite's dedication to creating a cohesive experience between the design tools. While that isn't really a bad thing, the shift in thinking is starting to take its toll on the Adobe suite. But hopefully designers can look to other tools that have seen the release of software updates that improve performance for a faster workflow. Or maybe it's just part of the process of moving away from Photoshop.

"As designers redefine what is possible through their work, their creations deserve the best tools to shape their imaginations into real-world art," said Kevin Lynch, senior vice president of design at Adobe. "Thanks to the talent of our extraordinary product teams and the work of our global community of users, we are delivering new ways to work, empower the people who dream the impossible, and take their creations to new heights." The updates in Photoshop come as part of Adobe's larger focus on helping creative professionals from designers to educators. Photoshop CC is now available to download for Creative Cloud subscribers for up to five on-premises edited images per month for $9.99 USD per month, or a one-time in-app purchase of $29.99 USD. Anyone else can simply buy Photoshop and add the CC subscription on a monthly or annual basis. On the desktop side, Adobe Photoshop CC now supports two-way Sync, so images with edits saved on the desktop will automatically update to the cloud. Users can also make larger file sizes more manageable with unlimited resolution at Layers Resolution. Properties are easier to maneuver in both the Property inspector window and the context menu. A new Tint tool lets users quickly change color and tone of an image and the Content Aware Fill tool makes it easy to automatically fill in objects such as people and text that are transparent or hidden. Additional performance improvements mean Photoshop is faster and more responsive.
